Ten blinds is the stack most tournament players face most often, and it is where the jam-or-fold simplification is at its strongest: you have just enough chips that folding still has option value, and just few enough that any raise smaller than all-in is a mistake. Every hand on this chart is either a shove or a fold — there is no third option to agonise over.

Compared with 8bb, every range tightens. That is the whole logic of push/fold in one sentence: the deeper you get, the more you have to lose by being called, so the more equity you need to justify the shove. The button drops from 47% to 43%, the small blind from 76% to 71%. Track the same hand across the 8bb, 10bb, 12bb and 15bb charts and you can watch it fall out of the range.

Use the EV column to build intuition rather than memorise cells. The hands that make real money are the ones showing +0.3bb and up; the hands that quietly cost you are the ones you were sure about that show a negative number.
