Twelve blinds sits on the boundary. It is still deep enough that a min-raise leaves you room to fold to a shove, and shallow enough that most of your value hands would rather just be all in. The honest way to use this chart is as the floor: any hand shown as a profitable jam is a hand you can always shove without thinking, whatever else you might do with it.

The positions do not tighten evenly. Compare 10bb to 12bb: UTG barely moves (15% → 13%), while the small blind drops from 71% to 67%. Early-position jam ranges are already so tight that another two blinds of depth changes almost nothing; the wide, steal-driven ranges are the ones that get pruned, because they were only ever profitable on fold equity.

The EV numbers matter more here than at 8bb, because the stack is big enough that being called actually hurts. A jam that runs at +0.02bb is not a strategy — it is noise. Build your range from the hands that show a clear positive number and leave the near-zero band for the spots where you have a read.
